Itacare 3 nights

The region in the south of Bahia, more specifically the band contained the Jequitinhonha and Contas Rivers, preserve the most significant parcel of Atlantic Rainforest in the northeast of Brazil. The forests of this region are characterized by tall trees with leaves that always remain green and the abundance of epiphytes. There you'll find species threatened with extinction like the yellow-breasted twig monkey and the ring-necked sloth.

54 km north of Ilhéus, at the mouth of the huge Contas River, Itacaré village offers several tours and landscapes of an impressive natural beauty. The geography in this part of the Bahia shore is unique, because the coast presents many mounts and water flows, falls and large stretches of Atlantic Rain Forest. At the coastal fringe there's a predominance of groves of coconut trees, beautiful beaches and crystal blue sea; deeper into the hinterland, within the native forest, we can visit cacao plantations. The whole region is part of the Environmental Protection Area Itacaré-Serra Grande and recently the creation of a State Park has been decreed. Besides trails into the forest, deserted beaches and cacao plantations, boat rides along Contas River present nice mangroves and graceful waterfalls. All of it is accompanied by the typical delicious food, good music and friendliness in Bahia. The town is very old and has a nice colonial architecture with buildings dated from 1700.
